

Every hour saved in turnover adds power to your capital

How a great commercial Bank is being used by its depositors to eliminate costly delays in business transactions

A MERCHANT is in urgent need of a carload of produce, five days overdue. Routine methods have failed to bring relief. Then the Bill-of-Lading Department of his bank sets in motion an expert service which locates his merchandise in a few hours and safeguards his margin of profit.

An exporter is hesitating to accept an order where the amount involved is large and the element of time important. The Foreign Department of his bank cables its special representative in a European capital and removes all cause for hesitation or delay by securing a foreign government's supervision of the contract.

A western bank selects as its New York correspondent a bank through the highly organized services of which eighteen hours can be saved in the handling of its securities and in the release of its capital.

Incidents like these are becoming more and more frequent. They point to the fact that business men everywhere are awakening to the importance of a more rapid turnover of capital.

The Irving's special services designed to speed up the turnover of capital

Delays in shipments, delays in collections, delays all along the line of production and distribution—these are what modern banking service must help eliminate.

The Irving has built up a special Bill-of-Lading

Department. This Department is organized to trace railroad shipments, to locate freight cars on arrival at terminals, to eliminate every sort of delay in releasing capital.

Every morning 40 messengers leave the Main Office of the Irving in the Woolworth Building—covering in person every important center in Greater New York.

By direct private wires to important cities and through well established connections with banks in all parts of the country, the Irving secures for its depositors maximum speed in handling all banking transactions.

Through correspondents in more than 5000 foreign cities, and through its special representatives in leading foreign markets, the Irving has built up a specialized service in collections and transfer of funds, and in obtaining credit information abroad. Direct cable connections are maintained with every trade center of the world.
